[REDACTED PARAGRAPH DUE TO OVEREXPOSURE]

1. A. By and large the groupings of the political parties in Chile is as follows:
 1. Rightists: Liberals, Conservatives, Traditionalist Conservatives, Agrarians, and Democrats "of Chile". These are joined in some districts by the Phalanx party, while in others the Phalanx joined the radicals or other groups.
 2. Left Center: Radicals, Socialists, National Democratic
 3. "Official" Ibanists: Farm Labor, Democratic "of the People", "Popular" Socialists, Doctrinaire Radicals, Progressive Feminine
 4. National Federation of Ibanist Forces: National Ibanist Movement, Chilean Feminine, National Christian and Labor
 5. Odd parties, including: National Union Movement, National Union of Independents, National Union of Pensioners, Popular Union, New Public Action and others.
- B. These groupings differ in some districts where local electoral pacts have been negotiated. For example, in the Talca district, the Radical candidates are on a common list with the Liberals, Traditionalist Conservatives and Agrarians, while in the San Fernando district Conservatives are allied to Socialists and National Union of the People, and are in opposition to Liberals and Traditionalist Conservatives.

- C. The supporters of President Ibanez are divided into three main groups: "Anap", that is, the National Alliance of the People; "Fenafui", National Federation of Ibanist Forces; and "Monap", National Movement of the People, and the feeling between the first two of these groups is running very high, on the surface at least, higher than between each one and the different opposition groups.
